Dear Mr. Sharma,

Kindly refer to my earlier communications regarding Pradhan Mantri Jan Dhan Yojana (PMJDY).

2. PMJDY, inter-alia, envisages Direct Transfer of Benefits / subsidies under various Schemes of Central Government and State Governments to bank accounts opened under PMJDY. State Governments have also been requested to transfer benefits under their various social security schemes through bank accounts opened under PMJDY. This will bring about transparency in service delivery and also enable optimal use of the Bank accounts and the Bank Mitras.

3. It is learnt from various banks that some Departments of State Governments have requested opening of a separate account for each Scheme for transfer of benefits.

4. I would like to draw attention to the fact that as per the Government of India guidelines of "One beneficiary - One Account for all Government Benefits", one single account is sufficient for transfer of benefits/subsidy under various Schemes of Central / State Government. Banks have also been informed accordingly.

5. Since accounts of about 99.98% households of the 21.05 crore households surveyed have been opened under PMJDY, a requirement to open a separate account for each Scheme would defeat the objective of PMJDY and also put the beneficiaries to an avoidable inconvenience. It would also lead to duplicity of work by the banks and affect the achievement of the objectives of PMJDY.

6. In view of the above, I would request you to issue necessary directions to all State Government departments to route all benefits through the existing accounts of the beneficiaries and not insist on opening of a separate account for each scheme.

7. I am confident that with your active support and cooperation the Pradhan Mantri Jan-Dhan Yojana will achieve even greater milestones in the days to come.

With warm regards,

Yours sincerely,

(Hasmukh Adhia)
